

Carl Gelderloos

I am an Associate Professor of German Studies in the Department of German and Russian Studies. I write about German modernism, science fiction, and critical theory, and teach German language, literature, and culture with a focus on the 19th and 20th centuries. I have been at Binghamton since 2014, and have been an academic delegate with UUP since 2021. I am very glad to work at a university with a strong union, and am particularly interested in contributing to the ways in which our chapter communicates with and reaches out to members (and potential members). Given the national context of a wider labor movement that seems to be finding its voice again, it is a particularly exciting time to be involved with a union. Beyond ensuring the best possible contract and working conditions for our members, I also believe that our union has to be central in defending public higher education as a force for the greater good.
